About the range:

Two of Dunlop's most notable feet's are developing rubber tyre's and of course the iconic Dunlop Greenflash Trainers as worn by Fred Perry. When John Boyd Dunlop patented the pneumatic tyre in 1888, the scene was set for Dunlop to become one of the most notable success stories in UK manufacturing history. Dunlop tyre's dominated the racing circuits for years and the Greenflash trainers since it's introduction in 1929 have achieved cult status and are widely acknowledged as an iconic footwear masterpiece. The Greenflash Trainer was preceded by the introduction of the Dunlop Wellington Boots which coincided with the acquisition of the Liverpool Rubber Co. in 1925.

Branching out from the Greenflash shoe Dunlop also introduced blue flash, red flash and amber flash. The aw12 collection uses the colourway's of all of the flash trainer family as its inspiration accompanied by the iconic flash logo. The flash logo is used as a major and minor graphic detail in the clothing and the range uses a mini greenflash trainer as the logo to the chest.
